[1] I'm back from this year's conference on Content-Based Multimedia Indexing [2]
(CBMI) .

It was a great event, showing where researchers are in development of image, sound and video recognition plus indexing multimedia to suggested classifications. What's most important is that spletin.net gets a development speed up as papers and presentations from a conference will save us at least one year of development (of three men programming). That's what I call power saving.
